

Social Stereotypes

The Over-Enthusiastic Drama Teacher

Mr Daniels was the typical drama teacher. He would hop and skip into the school he taught at bright and early. Whatever the time, he would beam a great smile that led from ear to ear and he spoke in an optimistically high-pitched voice. He was a short man, with a very thin, weedy figure. Everytime he spoke, he would over-exaggerate his point by using huge body gestures and his little eyes would expand like a butterfly whenever a moment got a little exciting. Mr Daniels was indeed an over-enthusiastic man.

He always wore tight chinos with a collared shirt and a cashmere jumper. Usually the jumper would be blue, with a black fabric coat draping over the top. Mr Daniels possessed a special driving force that guided him through the roadblocks of life. He dared to take risks and possessed an extraordinary creativity, leading him towards being a drama teacher. He was capable of manifesting his thoughts and fully realising his psychological and spiritual potential. He exhibited dedication towards his hobbies with an unwavering faith. He also had a mysterious charisma within.

Mr Daniels was extremely loud so everyone knew where he was at all times. Although he was a friendly man, you would not want to pester him when he was either stressed or mad, as a devil would be released from inside him. But everyone liked Mr Daniels, although he could easily be extremely annoying!

By Izzy C